

Ending regulation of the broadband practices of large phone companies will lead to monopolization of DSL services by the large phone companies, in the end destroying customer choice and increasing prices.

I cheerfully pay my local ISP (sonic.net) every month because of their excellent service and customer service. At the same time, I hear complaints constantly from my friends who use SBC as their provider.

By ending regulation, you destroy the small local ISPs that built the internet and continue to provide innovation and excellent customer service and support.

Bruce Scanlon
3629 23rd St.
San Francisco, CA 94110